01 of the 12 TripSavvy/Paula Galindo Boat Rentals in the grand lake that forms the central part of Retiro park will obviously cost you, but you don't need to pay a cent to enjoy the park yourself. Located east of the city centre at the end of Calle Alcalá, Madrid's most famous green space attracts thousands of visitors every year for a reason. But don't let a number of people scare you off if you're looking to avoid the crowds. The park is big enough that it doesn't feel too overwhelming and you can enjoy a relaxing walk in a relative world.

02 of the 12 TripSavvy / Paula Galindo Madrid is famous for its trio of museums known as the Golden Triangle of Art: Prado, Reina Sofía, and Thyssen-Bornemisza. 03 of 12 Madrid and Spain in general - full of picturesque squares. Fortunately, both of Madrid's two most famous squares are easily within reach of each other. First, it is Puerta del Sol, home to the famous statue of a bear and a tree, as well as a kilometer 0, which marks the exact geographical center of Spain. If you crave a sweet pickup truck, swing to Pastelería La Mallorquina on the western edge of the square for one of its famous chocolate napolitans. It's not free, but believe us, it's worth it. As you eat the dough, make your way down The Mayor's Calle to the second of Madrid's must-visit squares. The Plaza Mayor is perhaps Madrid's most iconic symbol there. Although it's more of a tourist hangout than a local space these days, the spectacular design of the square will be breathtaking.

04 of the 12 Madrid Metro Chambers Station was opened in 1919. Over the next few decades, it remained an important stop on the city's original metro line. Until he fell into a gradual insulce, that is. The station was closed in the 1960s and remained abandoned for decades. The restoration project in the 2000s turned the station into a former glory. It is open as a living reminder of what public transport was like in Madrid in the 1920s. Also known as And'n Cero, Camera Station is free to visit and provides fun, out-beat-way-out-beat-way to typical tourist attractions. Continue to 5 of 12 below.

Indeed, most of the major fashion houses in the world have shops here, making it the undisputed king of style when it comes to Madrid barrios. Obviously, buying something at one of these major fashion retailers is far from free. But the shopping window here can be a fun way to spend the day away from the crowds in the center of Madrid. The area is located to the north of the center and is mostly residential, so you'll be joined for a walk by Spanish families enjoying the fabulous weather of Madrid.

06 of 12 Paulo Fontes / Getty Images Yes, you read this right. The treasure of the ancient world can be found right here in Madrid. The Temple of Debod was a gift from the Egyptian government in 1968. As a result, it was completely deconstructed, moved piece by piece to Madrid, and restored. It is one of four ancient Egyptian temples in the world located outside its ancestral homeland, and it is absolutely free. The temple is located about a 10-minute walk north of the Royal Palace. Come to sunset for a particularly stunning view that you will remember for years to come.

07 of 12 TripSavvy / Paula Galindo Every Sunday morning, mandatory. The Flea Market Rastro installs a store in the La Latina area of Madrid. Calle de la Ribera de Curtidores and surrounding streets become a huge second-hand open-air store where sellers sell all sorts of unique trinkets and antiques. You don't even have to buy anything to enjoy your time here. Just spend an hour or two wandering among the stalls and check out the strange finds-this place is proof that one person's trash is another person's treasure.

08 of 12 Just down the street, hundreds of willing visitors flock to the Círculo de Bellas Artes building and its famous roof terrace. The problem: it's crowded, and even just getting up on top costs four euros (that's before you even buy one of the expensive drinks). This is not the case at The El Corte Inglés department store in Plaza Callao. Head to the ninth floor, where you will find not only a huge gourmet experience - a gourmet paradise, unlike any other, but also a terrace, which offers a similar view of Grand Vienna. Of course, you can have a snack or a drink if you want, but access to the terrace itself is absolutely free. Continue to 9 from 12 below.

12 of 12 David Crespo/Getty Images Palacio Real may be the official residence of Spain's royal family, but when it comes to official government issues, look at the Congreso de los Diputados. Built in the mid-19th century and easily recognizable by the famous lions that frame its front entrance, this outstanding building is proof that the government headquarters should not be stuffy and outdated.
